Dear Mr. Jenkins,

Thank you for visiting the Edinboro University campus and telling us about the work that you have been doing with composting. It was an inspiring topic to hear about on Earth Day. You have given the "Midas touch" to a topic that we previously may have considered unseemly.

I greatly enjoyed your presentation, and know that many of the students were quite interested in what you had to say. We appreciated your frank discussion, and the stories of how your interest in composting human materials has caused you to become an in-demand lecturer around the US and the world. A few of the students that were present are already planning ways to build their own compost toilets, and some others have said that when they get into a living situation where they have more control over their living arrangements they will consider instituting this type of recycling. We had a lively discussion during our follow-up class about whether or not composting toilets could be used on a greater scale.

I am pleased that Edinboro students could be exposed to such a progressive topic. I do not think we could have chosen better in terms of topics for the Earth Day presentation. Your presentation will be a tough act to top in coming years. We wish you the best, and thank you once again for your time.

Best Regards,

Karen Eisenhart
